HENDRICKS-INDIANA.

The contest in Indiana has been a cruel test of the strength of Hendricks in his own city and his own state.

Hendricks was the acknowledged brains and life of the "reform" party, nothing was done except by the dictation and consent of Mr. Hendricks, Blue Jeans Williams was Hendricks' chosen color bearer, the result shows that in Marion county (Indianapolis) where this was understood and admitted; in Hendricks' own home, he is beaten by 1,625, and Blue Jeans is damned by a beggarly majority of 28 in his own home.

CONSOLIDATION

MR CANNON AT MACON.

EDS. REPUBLICAN One of the largest political meetings that ever took place in this end of the country, assembled in Macon Hall last night, to hear the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, our representative member of Congress, discuss the political issues of the day. To say that he handled the subject in a masterly manner would be but a faint conception of the fact. The estimate of the crowd present can safely be put at 800. The Macon Scalpers, 100 strong, were out in uniform, led by the Macon band, while the artillery company boomed forth at intervals from 5 to 8 o'clock. The crowd was wildly enthusiastic, and applauded the speaker to the echo. Macon township is overwhelmingly Republican.

Oct. 13th, 1876.

The following is among the associated press dispatches of yesterday:

An immense and excited crowd gathered around the Courier-Journal office. In answer to repeated calls, Henry Watterson said: "I am satisfied, from a special telegram now in my possession, that we have carried Indiana, but I beg you to remember that we nominated Tilden upon the theory, elaborately discussed and distinctly understood, that we could give the West, etc., to the Republicans, and still beat them." Mr. Watterson continued to explain the situation from this standpoint, and said the loss of Indiana would lose Hayes Pennsylvania, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Mr. Watterson is a great man, a member of Congress, a distinguished journalist and a "Kaintuckian, sah," but all these attributes do not serve to obliterate his relationship with the Dampfhol family, the members of which have been lying to their souls this same flattering question for these many years, and never seem to learn anything by the failure of their prophecy. Watterson, you are a Bourbon.

TILDEN'S DEFEAT

From the Chicago Tribune.

The defeat of Tilden may now be accepted as an ascertained certainty. The elections in Ohio and Indiana have both shown the inability of the Democratic party to make the least aggressive impress upon the Republican party. In Vermont the Republicans lost one or two thousand of the majority, but the loss was too trifling to indicate the least change of popular sentiment in favor of the Democrats. In Maine, after a vigorous assault, the Republican majority remained almost undiminished. In the new State of Colorado, where two years ago the Democrats had two thousand majority, the Republicans were able not only to recover the State but to reverse this majority.

In this campaign the Republican party had to recover the ground lost in the overwhelming disaster of 1874. In that year they had lost State Governments, State Legislatures, and members of Congress, and a large popular majority was rolled up against them in many Republican States, as in Ohio, New York, Massachusetts, Indiana, and Illinois, and Republican majorities were reduced in Michigan and Wisconsin to a minimum. In the meantime, both parties to some extent divided on the currency question. In 1875, the struggle was precipitated in Ohio in the contest between Hayes and Allen, and, after an unprecedented effort on both sides, the Republicans recovered the State by 3,000 majority.

Indiana was a Democratic State before the War, and in 1868 nearly returned to that party,—the Republicans electing their Governor in that year by less than a thousand majority, while the State a month later gave Grant 10,000 majority. In 1870 the State voted Democratic, and in 1872 elected Hendricks by about 1,200 majority in October, and in November gave Grant 21,000 majority. In 1874 the State gave a Democratic majority of 17,000, and has now, in 1876, after the most memorable canvass on record, given a small Republican majority, which will be swollen by many thousands for Hayes in November. Considering that Hendricks was nominated to secure Indiana, that the vote of Indiana is indispensable to the election of Tilden, and that the Democratic candidate cannot be elected without it, the loss of Indiana practically determines and settles the fact that Tilden's defeat is inevitable.

[The above, from the Tribune of yesterday, was written when it seemed as though Harrison was elected. Subsequent developments, however, only serve to sustain the deductions made by the Tribune, since the result is really a Republican triumph.]

A CURIOSITY.

We have before us a ticket that was printed for use in Indianapolis at the late election. It is a curious one from its enormous length. In the first place there are the names of thirteen state officers, then congressmen, nine county officers and seven members of the legislature, then three commissioners, and ten township officers, making forty three names on this one ticket, and at the end of all these are two blanks for filling in the names of two supervisors.

This is doubtless an extra long ticket, even for a district in Indiana; but it indicates that containing twenty and thirty names must be common at this election, and this fact may give some idea of the enormous labor and time required to count of the vote of the state so as to give reliable results.

A letter written by a friend at Indianapolis, written on election day, informs us that, owing to their distrust of each other, the parties would not consent to have a single ticket handled by way of counting, until it was regularly counted for filing, as they feared the substitution of tickets.

In view of these circumstances, it is not surprising that the result should be in doubt for some days. Be patient, and don't get too much excited over partial returns.

SHOWING THEIR COLORS

A dispatch from Brunswick, Mo., to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat has the following:

Pollard and Debolt held a joint meeting in Keytesville, to-day, and a number of republicans of Brunswick went down to that place carrying a Hayes and Wheeler flag with them. When they arrived at Keytesville they were greeted by hisses and cries of "Damn that flag! shoot it!" After the speaking was over, Mr. Gritzmacher, who carried the flag, drove his buggy in front of the Charlton House, when six of the unfeared bushwhackers opened fire on him, and he was compelled to fly for his life by allowing his team to run at full speed. He has not been found. A party of republicans are now searching for him. The cowardly bushwhackers then yelled and shouted, and threatened to kill the whole party and all the damned Dutch s---s b---s, and some hallooed, "Hurrah for Tilden but damn that flag." There is great excitement, and further trouble is feared.

TEXAS is to be a grand republican mass meeting at Atlanta on Monday next, at which a beautiful flag will be presented to the largest delegation from any town. Messrs. Calton, Ogleby and Tipton will be the speakers.

INDEPENDENT LYING.

Chicago Tribune.

The fourth page of the Times was on yesterday graced by a double-leaded editorial informing its readers that Indiana, Ohio and West Virginia had all gone in the interest of "purified government and real reform." Ohio, it says, gives a democratic majority of 16,000, Indiana 12,000, and West Virginia 5,000. Had this appeared in a professed democratic paper, it could pass unnoticed as a specimen of reckless partisanship; but when such singular stuff is put into sheet calling itself independent, the case is different. For this wild romance about the result of the elections was written by a man who had before him dispatches which would have shown him reading was one of his accomplishments, that Ohio had gone republican and that Indiana was so close that no reckless gambler or enthusiastic
